Prevailing wage laws ensure that skilled workers build our roads, schools and other publicly funded construction while keeping taxpayer-funded projects on time and on budget. They provide the means for best-in-the-industry training and apprentice programs that create the next generation of skilled trades workers that Michigan needs to build and maintain its infrastructure.

Any attempt to repeal the prevailing wage is all about politics. Michigan deserves safe roads and bridges, and our children should have structurally safe schools. Special interests and a small group of corporate CEOs are putting that at risk. The prevailing wage prevents substandard and shoddy construction and results in safer and more productive construction projects.

Prevailing wage laws provide a working relationship between contractors and employees that results in comprehensive training programs and ensures the hiring of quality workers who are Michigan residents who stabilize our communities. Doing away with the prevailing wage opens the door for unskilled, out-of-state workers to undercut our Michigan way of life.

To improve our economy, keep children and families safe, and ensure that tax dollars are spent wisely, we must keep our prevailing wage laws.
